She is afraid that when Karan gets married, he will get lured into an arranged marriage by a dishonest person. Karan's only weakness is his love for his favorite childhood book. Puran is determined to stop him from reading the book. He explains to Usha that according to the local customs, the person who is reading this book will be the one who will be marrying the daughter of the family. Usha asks her son if this is what he is planning, and he says yes, but he also tells his mother that he will ask Nishita to get married to him instead. He does ask her for the favor, and she says yes. But she also adds that if he does not marry her, he must get married to the girl he likes. Karan's parents want him to marry a girl from a good family, and agree to this plan for his own good. Karan finds two beautiful girls and invites both of them to be his daughters-in-law.
